

Lash LaRue

Guard Llama

Birthday: October 1988

Lash LaRue or Lash as we call him is the protector of all the animals on the farm. Guard Llamas are known to chase away wolves, coyotes, wild dogs & anything harmful to the flock, including children. They hum when they are happy and sound a trumpet-like sound when danger is sensed. When this happens all of the goats will gather close to him, because they know that he will protect them.

In addition to watching over flocks of sheep and goats, Guard Llamas are also used carrying backpacks.

Lash Doesn't like to be petted, but if you stand there quietly you may be lucky enough that he will come up close and check you out, maybe even give you a kiss or nuzzle up to you. Beware, though, Llamas do spit; it is a form of self defense.

Lash LaRue is 17 years old; it is unusual to find a Llama this mature as their lifespan is typically 9-10 years.

Brown

Goat

Birthday: April 2002

You can recognize Brown by his long goatee. He is very quiet and gentle. He can often be spotted with his good buddy, Buster as they do not like to be separated.

Can you guess how he got his name?

Trevor & Jenny

South African Boer Goats

Birthday: April 2002

Trevor is the eater of the group. Our "Big Boy" weighs in at over 100 lbs. Beware at feeding time because nothing gets in the way of Trevor and his food. He is wearing the green collar.

Jenny is one of our quieter goats. She can often be spotted hanging back from the rest of the group. She is wearing the red collar.
